Introduction

Introduction

Philosophy

Religions in fantasy campaigns are too often treated as minor matters, with the typical priest of what's-his-name, or just a generic priest, wandering around casting spells that are somewhat different from those of the wizards, but with no commitment to anything and no individual characteristics.

In order to play the role of religions in a campaign, the gamemaster must create the gods and then handle their actions. The Energion religions system is designed to make sure that each religion is unique and that each priest must be fully aware of his or her religion and the duties of the priest. This system may appear a little complicated, but it is actually relatively simple. The material presented in this manual is arranged for easy computerization and a program is included for handling spell lists.

The role of gods in fantasy worlds has been a much neglected topic. As they are giving spells to priests on a regular basis, the gods must be very real and very involved. The fantasy gamemaster must take this into account in playing their role and the role of priests. The basic theory for doing this is contained in the section on the rule of the gods.

Each god is different. Earth religions develop theologies relating to the needs and interest of their worshippers, and this would be even more the case in a fantasy campaign. Because of this, each deity should have an individual list of spells, rituals and other powers to go with the spheres of power. A sun god, moon god and a death god should not have the same capabilities any more than they will have the same aims.

Rule of the Gods

The following general rules are useful for designing powers of religions and for maintaining the balance between religions. These principles should be adapted to the individual campaign, and form part of the magic theory and cosmology of my campaign. I call these principles the Rule of the Gods.

1. The gods combine to maintain the ordered universe and to keep it from being reabsorbed by primeval chaos.

2. However the first gods came into existence (see creation mythologies), gods now gain power in accordance with the number of worshippers they have. Conversions are therefore very important to any deity.

3. What a god may do is defined by the tolerance of the other gods to his action. The most costly event for a god is direct personal interference. Deities will make every effort to work through their worshippers as this is more cost effective in the long run. The more personal attention a god must pay to an action, the more costly it is; therefore, the more directly the deity must interfere in a decision, the more it costs.

4. Gods divide themselves into spheres of power, also because they may be more cost effective in this way. As a general rule, the more spheres a god maintains control over the greater his or her power. This is not always true, however, as the god may maintain greater or lesser control over any particular sphere.

5. Power of priestly spells or miracles is determined by the sphere of control and political power of the deity.

6. Each deity has a defined subplane, usually of a pantheon subplane (6th dimension) of bounded chaos. Some of these extend into paramaterial in cases where the god claims a particular element of control or a material sphere (sky, ocean).

7. Each deity has servants related to his sphere of control. In some cases, in the past, some of these creatures rebelled, and now live on separate planes. They vary greatly in spheres of control and attitudes, and their territories include some areas which extend into bounded chaos. Their territory as a whole is well protected, but they may be forced into service due to specific curse of their former deities. These have functions as demons, devils, elementals, angels, and other bizarre creatures which have lived on other planes. Certain religions have particular servants of high level who rebelled against their god and thus was thrown down to this place (down is hardly a good description!) and evil doers are automatically considered to worship this adversary (Satan, the Devil, etc.). These creatures are the fodder of a Summoner's life. They may be forced to do a number of interesting and at times unpleasant things with sufficient effort. Some creatures also live voluntarily on these planes. One thing which a summoner must keep track of is the nature of each creature. A voluntary resident may not be forcibly summoned or forced into service. Others require specific knowledge of deity curses.

The Gods in Human Affairs

Gods interfere in human affairs because it interests them for some reason, and because they gain power from the worship of intelligent creatures. Because of the attitudes of other gods engaged in the same game, they try to do so with as little interference as possible. They work through human agents. These human agents may be priests, persons especially dedicated to the religion, or just common worshippers. The things that people do for the gods do not cost the gods in the attitudes of their fellows.

One of the major reasons that the gods deal second-hand in human affairs is that god wars are very costly. Since gods deal with the fabric of the universe in a major way, their combat capabilities are necessarily great, and have a tendency to destroy large areas of the multiverse. Thus, fighting for power occurs in the human sphere. In the long run, many gods hope to get enough worshipper power to be able to take absolute control of the multiverse and make it in their image.

The attitudes and actions of the gods should be played with the long view in mind. These beings are immortal, and so automatically take the long view. Try to simulate the effect of their lack of concern over the momentary accomplishments of their religion. Things which may seem to be a major disaster to the a priest who is taking the short and narrow view, may be merely a minor incident from the point of view of the gods, who take a longer view.

A priest on the spot sees that a great leader of his religion is about to die. He prays to his god for special favors to help him save the leader from death. Is this a cause for more direct intervention on the part of the deity? It depends on the culture and the religion. The martyrdom of a charismatic leader could be a simple example. If a religion and culture have the proper attitudes toward self sacrifice, and consider giving one's life for the cause to be a high value, then a martyrdom may be a very good thing for the growth of a religion.

Religions and Politics

The fact that religions have powers which are repeatable, miracles on demand, means that they will have a significant influence on the affairs of countries. The gods might have various motivations, and their priests certainly will.

For the most part, the priests may be treated simply as individuals with the appropriate powers who have certain political aims. The gods may have other motivations. These motivations will relate closely to the god's desire for more worshippers. Remember, however, that the gods will take a longer view than the average humans, and this should be reflected in the way that they are played.

Developing Priestly Powers

The specific spheres which gods may control will vary, but those necessary to run adventures in the territory partially described in the Basic Manual are listed here. These provide spheres for one pantheon and an opposing religion. The pantheon and god spells are listed under the descriptions of the religions. They are merely an example and contain basic spells to use with the Energion Campaign System.

A priest's spell list should consist of general spells, powers so common that all priests must have them in order to make their religion effective; sphere spells, those spells which are required in order to be perceived as properly controlling a sphere; pantheon spells, which are those spells which characterize a group of gods or a culture which worships them; and spells of the individual god, to include secret powers and trademark spells. It should be difficult to predict exactly what a priest can do.

Special abilities may be handled as zero level spells, which cost no power levels to cast. Handle these sorts of spells very carefully, as they can have a major impact even with small power, since the priest need expend none of his or her daily power when using them.

Unlike the highly technical spells of spellcasters and manipulators, the level of a priest's spells are based on the power. The gods keep a balance in how much power they expend in the multiverse. They try to get as much as possible from individual human action. No spell should exist which requires intervention of the god. Those types of actions can only be taken in special circumstances, if then.

Ceremonies and rituals are religious events which may simply indicate to the deity that his worshippers actually worship him, but which may also have real power. These may be included in the generated spell lists or handled separately. The lists in this book do not contain any ceremonies, but these can be added and coded easily.

The Harar Gods

In the Pareston area, where the sample combat occurs, there are two major opposed religions, that of the Harar pantheon, and the Velanac religion. The majority of the people in Pareston worship the former. In the neighboring country of Ta Ketep, Velanac is the major religion. That country is rather oppressive, and not a particularly nice place to live. There is commerce with them in any case. The following brief descriptions are provided to go with the spell list generation program and spells provided.

The Harar pantheon also includes other gods, but these are not necessary for immediate use. The spheres required for these gods are: 001/War, 002/Fertility, 004/Magic, 008/Air, 011/Knowledge, 012/Justice, 018/Weather, 019/Agriculture, 025/Sun, and 028/Politics. The gaps in the number codes are for other spheres which are necessary for other pantheons. The pantheon code for Harar is 340. Spells with this code are usable by any priest of one of the

General Spells (000)

The following spells are general spells, which are required simply to make priests viable characters in your campaign. Some of the effects of these spells may be duplicated by ones designed for sphere or pantheon, in which case they should not be available to the priests concerned.

For purposes of the program listing provided, these spells are coded with a "#000" indicating that they are available to all priests. Those who are planning to use a version of the program may see the program listing and documentation for the specific handling of the various spell codes. For anyone not planning to use that program, those codes after a back slant bar (\) are spheres which are not permitted to have the spell indicated. Everyone else may. This usually means that they have a replacement on their sphere list. The sphere codes are all expanded at the beginning of their spell list.

The following codes are included in this general list, even though the spheres are not further expanded or the gods described. These are left here for illustration, as suggestions for your own future development, and to allow this list to mesh better with planned products further describing the Energion universe. The codes noted are: 003/Healing, 005/Fire, 006/Water, 020/Disease, ERL/Erlion, and PER/Perlina. Both of the deities listed have the relatively rare sphere of Travel, and so get a separate version of the spell. Any gods which you decide to describe for your campaign may have replacement spells for certain of these general ones, usually indicating better control of the sphere. If so, they should not get the general spells.

Abbreviation usage follows:

The Sphere of War (001)

This is a very straightforward sphere, for priests whose religion is designed to encourage the learning and practice of the arts of war. The sphere is neutral as to philosophy. The war priest may be supporting war for its own sake, war in defense of family, or holy war in support of the religion. Spells specific to these purposes should be included in the pantheon and deity spell lists.

The Sphere of Magic (004)

Triggers may be simple (a blow) [no level cost], Complex (a command word or phrase) [costs one level], or truly complicated (a bizarre sequence of events) [costs three levels]. Effect area and casting time are invariable, but other values are to be calculated as level costs according to the spellcaster system.

Any spell which the cleric can cast may be attached to the item without regard to level. Discharge time is 1 second. The spell must be inactive. If the caster is a priest/mage he/she may place spell levels of the second class in the item as well with the normal mage limitations of matrix size, casting time and spell set-up. #004

Name: Resist Magic Lvl: Rng: Dur: EA: CT: Notes:
2-10 T 24h 1mr 10m

Description: Allows a suppression of magical effects within the area of effect which reduces the effectiveness of magic by the 10%*levels-1. Spell effects still occur, but they will be reduced in effect in whatever way is possible after the casting parameters have been set, such as reducing the effectiveness of an energy ball. This spell does not apply to religions without such a specific enemy.

3-10 Spec Spec Spec 1s

Description: Augments an existing spell or matrix, increasing the power of the existing spell up to the desired level, up to the maximum cleric spell level that the caster can work. If the caster is a priest/mage he/she may place spell levels of the second class in the item as well with the normal mage limitations of matrix size, casting time and spell set-up.

#004

Name: Mathematical Comprehension Lvl: Rng: Dur: EA: CT: Notes:
